chough range for Amneris. She suffered like her companion from nervousness, though not so much, but still denough to disturb her phrasing and in the several instances her intonation. Her delivery of the more declamatory measures of Amneris lacked intensity, but she sang much of the role admirably. It is likely that both of the newcomers will be heard to greater advantage in other opens. Mme. Onegin has a rich and noble

Of Mr. Burke it is unnecessary to say more than that he seemed last evening to be a utility bass of a type familiar to all opera houses. The other principals were Glovanni Martinelli as Radiomes, Giuseppe Danise as Amonasro and Jose Mardones as Ramis. Miss Florence Hart was the solo dancer in the scene of the triumph. Mr. Moranzoni conducted. There have been smoother performances of "Alda" at the Metropolitan, but here again the continued anxieties of two important debutantes must be considered.

gigantic task, and come through with his his task well on his feet. His treatment of his score lies very near Wagner, and not far from Strauss. The themes of the orchestra and their development form the best part of the work. The solo lips are often weak, but the choruses stand out in a dramatic light. Thus it will be noted, the score fails in a perfect cohesiveness. The style is largely operatic. The "chorus of the seven vials," for instance, is in good oratorio spirit. The score which is not too long drawn out, was splendidly produced, as a whole, and Mr. Stoessel shared the enthusiastic applause with the composer. A brilliant audience filled the auditorium.

During a few moments of consciousness yesterday Mr. Tridon was informed by his wife that many inquiries had been made regarding his condition. He dictated a statement telling of the operation of a month ago, which was performed by Dr. Joseph G. King at the Lexington Hospital. After telling of the discovery of the cancer Mr. Tridon closed his statement with "At the present moment ail hope of recovery has been given up." He became unconscious again and died at 9 o'clock last night. At his bedside were his wife and her sister, Mrs. Frederick C. Smith of Hartford, Conn.; Mr. and Mrs. William Cole, Dr. M. A. Jagendorf, Dr. N. Phillip Norman and a nurse.

Physicians and members of the family alike were amazed at the fight which Mr. Tridon made against the maiady for which no operation could be performed. His death was expected three days ago.
